Amber blends her leadership experience in high performing organizations with her expertise in the practice of coaching and development to deliver high impact, high value services to her clients. As the Principal of Pond Leadership Group, Amber accesses an extensive network of coaches and consultants to provide expert resources to her clients.

Amber is an experienced executive coach, consultant, and facilitator. She has a strong track record of success providing executive coaching, team alignment & facilitation, and leadership development workshops to clients across the public and private sectors, including many in the Global Fortune 500.

Amber is sought after for her engaging style, insight, and skill as a trusted advisor. An expert in the field, she was a contributing author to Best Practices in Leadership Development, Second Edition, quoted in the WSJ, and has been a featured presenter at leadership development conferences. After graduating from the Leadership Coaching Program at Georgetown University, she was invited to join the faculty and serve as an assessor for Georgetown's Institute for Transformational Leadership.

An experienced leader, Amber is the former board chair for Miriam's Kitchen, an award-winning DC-based homeless services organization, and the current board governance chair for the AIDS Resource Foundation for Children. Amber spent twelve years with PricewaterhouseCoopers where she was a management consultant to leading companies in the health care sector and a director in global human capital.

Amber holds a Professional Certified Coach (PCC) credential from the International Coaching Federation, a master's degree from the Harvard Kennedy School, and a bachelor's degree from Rutgers University. Amber is certified in a range of personality assessments and feedback instruments.

Amber lives in Washington, DC with her husband and three children. She is an avid podcast and poetry fan, an amateur birder and can often be found strumming the ukulele.
